Highlights of the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) of 1974, also known as the Buckley Amendment, helps protect the privacy of student records.

Who has to comply with FERPA?
- Educational institutions and educational agencies that receive funds under any program administered by the US Secretary of Education.

Who has FERPA rights at the post-secondary level?
- A student “in attendance” (regardless of age—even if under 18) and former students.

What are these Rights?
- Right to inspect and review records.
- Right to request to amend records.
- Right to limit disclosure of “personally identifiable information” (Information that would directly identify the student or make the student’s identity easily traceable).

What are records under FERPA?
- Education records are defined as records that are directly related to a student; and maintained by an educational agency or institution or by a party acting for the agency or institution.

What is considered Directory Information?
- Directory information may be released for any purpose at the discretion (for a legitimate educational purpose) of the respective school unless notified in writing to the contrary. It includes: name, current address, current telephone number, permanent address, permanent telephone number, date of birth, major field of study, dates of attendance, degree(s) conferred/awarded, previous institutions attended, past and present participation in officially recognized sports and activities, class (FR, SO, JR, SR, Graduate Student), academic honors.
- In the case that a student has chosen to block the release of directory information, the appropriate response to a third party request is “I have no information about that person.”
